MODERN ART OF SPAIN

Art History 134E (4 units)

The course will consider the cultural, social, and political context of Spain in the years leading up to and during the civil war and how these issues are reflected in the content and form of the art produced. For example, while Picasso disdained overtly political art, his 1937 mural: Guernica, embodied the inhumanity, brutality, and hopelessness of war and raised consciousness about the threat of fascism. You will study this painting, considered to be one of the most powerful indictments against war created in the 20th century, where it hangs at the Reina Sofia Museum in Madrid, along with works of the other artists considered in this course.

SPANISH CINEMA

Choose Film and Media 160 or Comparative Literature 160 (Fulfills UCI Breadth Requirement VII-B or UCI GE Requirement VIII) (4 units)

The new challenges of Spanish Cinema in recent times are centered around refiguring the new democratic national identity. Two interesting tendencies are emerging- one from the 1980's, and the post-modern movies of Pedro Almodóvar and the new generation of 1990's. Both tendencies are redefining the new Spain, and we will see this reflected on the screen throughout this course. Through screenings, readings, class discussions and field trips, this course will introduce the industrial, aesthetic, social and cultural history of Spanish cinema.
